Do You Want Accidents?

The subject this week is highway safety, and especially street safety. Thus warned, it is presumed that the great number of Bethel people who evidently are not interested will read no further. So, knowing that this column can do nothing to improving conditions, we continue.

It is indeed disheartening to note the continued selfish habits of our townspeople. There are altogether too many of us, fully acquainted with the rules of the road, and all the little niceties of highway courtesy, and even the reasonable requirements of the traffic and parking regulations adopted a few years ago by the Bethel Village Corporation, who continue to stop and start at their own peculiar convenience.

Apparently unable to walk a few hundred feet if the car can be edged nearer to our goal, streets are blocked and near accidents avoided many times a day. It is not strangers or student drivers who do these foolish things. No, it is our mature motorists, who have been around and must know better. But Bethel, you know, is a small town. And who wants to have the law enforced, and give court records to respected citizens.

It is still well to watch these natives. Stop signs were meant for the other fellow. Ordinary traffic rules apply to them only when convenient. Both sides of the street are there for their use, no matter which direction their car is going. Yes, we'll try to dodge them for a while yet.

Gould Surveys Pupils' Needs

The Headmaster, Faculty, and Trustees of Gould Academy are conducting this year an extensive study of the school to include the physical plant, the educational program, and the staff, in an attempt to establish more soundly its educational philosophy and thereby render greater service to all boys and girls of the day and boarding departments.

The Evaluative Criteria which was developed by the cooperative study of Regional Associations of Colleges and Secondary Schools and which has been widely employed all over the country by regional accrediting associations, state departments of education and local school systems, will be used in the study. The entire process includes a self-analysis of the school's program and services, followed by a further appraisal by a visiting committee made up of leading educators from other institutions.

The results of the study will provide invaluable material which can be integrated in the school program to meet more fully the needs of all students. Steering committees that will direct the course of the studies have been organized as follows:

1. Educational Needs of Youth—Edmond Vachon, Kimball Ames, Robert Clinie, Theodore Emery, Miss Valeria Kimball, Miss Mary Whitney, Murray Thurston, Charles Pendleton.

2. Pupils Population and School Community—Elwood Ireland, Wilbur Myers, John Carter, Donald Christie, Clayton Fossett, Paul Thurston, Miss Eva Bean, Mrs. Ernest Blisbee.

These committees will be most grateful to the parents, alumni, and friends of the school whom they may contact in the months ahead, for all information and help received in the pursuit of their goals.

Through the cooperative effort of everyone, it is the earnest hope of all that a program of educational service and training which will meet more fully the needs of the youths in our communities may evolve.

ACTOR-WRITER-DIRECTOR
ELLIOTT LEWIS, currently the producer-director of CBS' "Broadway's My Beat" and "Mr. Aladdin" coast-to-coast radio programs, is truly a triple-threat man in the radio medium. . . . Twenty-four year old Lewis, a native of Mount Vernon, New York, has served as the lead actor on many dramatized programs, he's written scripts for CBS' "Suspense" and other shows, and, in this new field of directing to which he's devoted all of his time there past three seasons, Elliott Lewis has guided many Hollywood stars through dramatic chores before the microphone.

Keeping the theme strictly in radio, though Lewis has been active in films and on records, he feels no other medium is as all-satisfying to the actor or director as radio. . . . Lewis has this advice to give those who come day hope to achieve success in the entertainment field, "The goal he is acting, writing, directing."

"Get with the things which go on about you during your waking hours," says Lewis. . . . "See what is going on, LISTEN to the voices and conversations. . . . Go on about you all day. . . . Keep as fully as possible your sense of observation and store in memory the minor points you've seen and heard."

Lewis recalls a former radio actress, now a well known film personality, who years ago would follow a person on the streets for hours. . . . Taking a guess as to what type of person this was, the actress would follow and note everything he did. . . . Whether he took a taxi or subway, which shops along the route particularly interested him, and how he carried himself. . . . She'd made countless "type studies" of this kind. . . . This actress would spend hours making theatrical costume designs, waitresses, teachers, etc., and all the while she'd be taking her mental notes. . . . Subsequently, a few years later on the screen she came up with just the right making for the character at hand. "Acting," says Lewis, "is taking everyday life and transferring it to as much realism as possible to the entertaining medium."
